Blind Routes to Independence Employment

Getting the right job, and enjoying the financial and social benefits this brings, is crucial in developing confidence and maintaining self-worth. If you are considering a return to work or have never worked you may be feeling some of the following things:

- An employer is bound to view my disability as an issue.
- I'm out of touch with the modern workplace.
- My application will go straight into the bin.
- Will I fit in?
- Will I be better off financially if I work?

Many people in the job market share these concerns. Work is an important part of life and influences so many other aspects of it. Apprehension is natural - you are not alone.

Preparing blind and partially sighted people for the world of work can take some time. Much of the ground work involves confidence building and the development of new skills.

BlindVoice UK aims to provide help with:

- Confidence Building & Self Assertion
- ICT Training
- Creating a CV
- Learning Opportunities including ICT & Braille
- Writing winning applications
- Developing interview skills
- Coping mechanisms at work

The goal of this project is to make it easier for employers to be able to provide employment for blind people and for blind people to find employment.
